Sacred Heart Rehabilitation Center to open two new outpatient service sites.

MEMPHIS, MI - Sacred Heart has begun providing addiction treatment and mental health services from the Algonac and New Haven Medical Centers of Downriver Community Services.

"I am pleased to partner with Downriver Community Services to improve the services we can provide to our mutual clients," said Grady L. Wilkinson, Chief Executive Officer of Sacred Heart. "The wide range of physical health and social services available at the Downriver Clinics will compliment the addiction treatment services we offer." Sacred Heart is a non-denominational, non-profit charitable service corporation. In addition to the outpatient services Sacred Heart also offers adult detoxification and residential treatment for addictive disorders at its main campus in Memphis and specialized residential services for women and women with children at its Clearview program in Port Huron.

Bob Peoples, Downriver's interim CEO, stated, "We believe the communities that Downriver serves will benefit from a partnership with Sacred Heart that emphasizes cooperation between the two organizations. Sacred Heart and Downriver share a common mission, purpose and values; and our common goal is to provide high-quality counseling services while controlling the cost of services to our patients and community residents." Downriver Community Services is a nonprofit Federally Qualified Health Center serving southern St. Clair and northern Macomb counties. Its medical centers in Algonac and New Haven offer primary medical care and preventive healthcare services. The organization collaborates with other service organizations to make a wide variety of ancillary health and human services available at its two locations.
